International Sports Law

The Asser International Sports Law Centre is offering a Summer Programme in International Sports Law to provide an overview of the ever expanding area of sports law and the topics of law that impact upon sports.

Expanding area of international sports law

Twenty years ago the concept of “sports law” would have been foreign to most. Today, it is far more widely recognised as an established field of legal scholarship and practice, perhaps because it is a lucrative business that creates around $35 billion per year in revenue or perhaps due to the high profile of athletes, sports clubs and organizations’ seemingly endless encounters with the law.

Such cases as Murphy, which addresses the interface of free movement and sports broadcasting in Europe; the recent finding that the threat of a playing ban by FIFA against Matuzalem was contrary to public policy; the endless saga involving the dope-fuelled career of Lance Armstrong and its wider affect on competitive cycling; and the daily accounts of sports fraud (particularly match-fixing) which has emerged as perhaps the most serious global issues in the world of sport have been addressed by such tribunals as the European Court of Justice

(ECJ), Court of Arbitration for Sport (CAS), Swiss Supreme Court, and national courts. The burgeoning sports-oriented workload of these courts has had a significant impact on sports law as an academic field and helped contribute to its establishment as a global field of private practice.
